/kraken/status/651548146175471473?s=19 ===== _nalply Kraken operates in the US. So the situation is similar to Bitstamp.

If you want to use it, you need to use another non-US-based exchange.

Identification of a disulphide-linked homotetrameric extracellular matrix (ECM) protein of the beetle Manduca sexta. A 52 kDa protein has been identified in Manduca sexta anti-ECM immune egg extract. The protein has been shown to be a homotetramer by combining two-dimensional electrophoresis and Western analysis. The protein is extensively glycosylated and consists of up to six N-linked glycans per molecule. The protein has been isolated from the ECM by preparative isoelectric focusing. Analysis of the purified protein by partial N-terminal sequence and matrix-assisted laser desorption-ionization mass spectrometry indicated that the majority of its amino acid residues are located in the C-terminal domain. The protein was located in the ECM and secreted into the perivitelline space, where it was induced during embryogenesis.

Q: How to avoid duplicate sound effects? I'm looking to create some audio effects for a game where I have several different sources from which I want to pick up random samples (detectors, sensors, etc). Say, a sensor detects that a door has been opened and a sound effect is triggered. It's a simple enough effect, but if that sound effect gets played twice, both the door and the sound effect are in the background
